Almost all the American east coast is just a short train ride from New York. But if you want to have a taste of what that excitement in the Field Museum was like, you must visit Exposition Park in Chicago—home to the Field Museum of Natural History. The museum has been open since 1893 and is located in the heart of Chicago’s Museum Campus. It is considered one of the world’s finest natural history institutions in the world. At the opening of the Field Museum, the entrance to the second floor was the world’s largest open space. The museum has since been expanded and now features a wide range of exhibits, including one on paleontology that displays some of the most impressive fossils from around the world. A large screen displays a 3D animation of a dinosaur’s movement, and a children’s area allows visitors to explore the exhibits themselves. The museum is open daily from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., and admission is $22 for adults and $21 for seniors and students. Children under 3 are free, and parking is available nearby.

Not just for cameras

Leuven’s well-designed campfire has been worked into multiple packaging bags that carry garlic, parmesan cheese as well as a camera. The new Storm model comes in three sizes, with a sleek black and white color scheme. The Storm features a camera-friendly design with adjustable straps that accommodate different cameras. The Storm also has a padded compartment for a laptop or tablet. It is water-resistant and can be used as a backpack or a shoulder bag. It is available in blue, green, black, and gray colors.

Wang Ke, today, said he is committed to local art, and particularly to film and photography. The exhibition is free and open to the public, and runs from October 27th to November 10th. The main piece on display is a large-format digital print of the artist’s work, which was created using a filmstrip technique. The print features a series of images that capture the essence of traditional Chinese culture and everyday life. The exhibition also includes several other works by Wang Ke, including a video installation that explores the relationship between light and shadow. The exhibition is on display at the Shanghai Museum of Modern Art, and is open daily from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.
